A Circle Chain Contract is a tool a producer/owner of goods or services can use to trade their product/property at market value for goods or services instead of paying cash. Consider a carousel surrounded by people with packages as it rotates; people place a package on it and remove a package.

The beginning is the packaging of products and services. Like the inventory of a supermarket, packaging contains the details of a contract: choose the item you want, deliver it to the checkout stand, pay the price and it is yours.

Packaging for a trade includes who pays for delivery, where from and when, along with other pertinent features: description, quality, quantity and sizzle.

A chain of 12 separate offers of specific packages each having two additional offers provides the first party 35 individual packages to choose from. Packages are displayed, offers communicated and contracts generated through the internet.
